

Incident Response and Crisis Management Training Exercise

Improve the readiness of your organization

How well is your company, employees, and community prepared for an active shooter incident? This interactive training exercise gives your employees the tools to respond and stay safe when faced with an emergency or threat in the office.

Length: 6 hours

Delivery: In-person, interactive active threat simulations

Audience: Employees, internal and external security personnel, and local first responders

Tomahawk's unique training approach includes employees, company leaders, security personnel, and local first responders to ensure cohesion and partnership in their response and protocols. In this training, participants will:

- Take part in hands-on, active threat realistic scenarios
- Evaluate and improve responses
- Become familiar with office protocols, which is especially important for first responders who aren't familiar with your building

LEADERSHIP FEEDBACK

The Incident Response and Crisis Management Exercise that the Tomahawk team plans, organizes, and facilitates is, in my professional experience, the safest, most well-run, and most effective method available to truly test and evaluate an organization's comprehensive approach to an active threat."

PARTICIPANT FEEDBACK

The training was very informative and eye-opening for me. I assumed I would know what to do but froze when I first heard the gunshots. It was helpful to 'practice' as I felt more prepared the second time around, and immediately acted. While I hope to never experience a shooting, I believe I would be able to fall back on today's training."
